

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

September 21, 2023

I send my warmest greetings to all those celebrating the 30th anniversary of AmeriCorps.

Over the last three decades, more than 1,250,000 people have proudly and selflessly served in AmeriCorps. Members of AmeriCorps represent the very best of America—bringing people from all backgrounds together to uplift others, bolstering the bonds that unite our communities, and promoting the dignity and respect of everyone in this great Nation.

For 30 years, AmeriCorps members and volunteers have been on the front lines of confronting our country's greatest challenges. Whether they are supporting schools in underserved communities, rebuilding after natural disasters, making our people and our planet healthier, or serving the most vulnerable among us—including veterans and seniors—AmeriCorps members and volunteers are a constant reminder of the resilience, kindness, and compassion of our Nation.

I have always believed there is nothing the United States cannot do when we do it together. This is the essential work of our democracy, and since its founding, AmeriCorps has been a critical partner in pursuing that vision of unity for our Nation. As we mark this milestone anniversary, I extend my deepest gratitude to AmeriCorps members and volunteers—past and present—for all the ways you have strengthened our country. Your spirit of service truly embodies who we are as Americans.
